SHATTERING OUR IDOLS.

The Toronto Star offers vigorous objection to the statement by an American historian that the American revolution was justified because it was led by a man of Washington's high character. The Star does not believe it necessarily follows that because the leader of a cause is a man of splendid character that the cause he leads is righteous. Then comes the fling at some of our idols:

"For that one man of character, there were a dozen men of no character at all. Patrick Henry was a seedy, disreputable demagogue; Sam Adams was a shabby defaulter and mendicant; Ben Franklin was an immoral old reprobate. The character of Washington was imperfect morally, like that of most Virginians at that time. Surely his virtues do not loom large enough to justify revolution. Generals Stonewall Jackson and Robert E. Lee were men of far higher and more austere virtues. Did these virtues make the civil war a righteous cause?"

Well, well, well. Who'd a think it? Patrick Henry a "seedy, disreputable demagogue," Samuel Adams a "shabby defaulter and mendicant," Benjamin Franklin "an immoral old reprobate." It is quite apparent that we will have to revise some of our histories. But perhaps the Star is just a wee bit harsh. Patrick Henry and Adams and Franklin were only men. They had their faults, just as other men have faults, but we shall refuse to dislodge them from their pedestals even at the suggestion of the Toronto Star.

Why, there have been worse men in prominent public life in England than any of the patriots even at the suggestion of the Toronto Star.

Why, there have been worse men in prominent public life in England than any of the patriots the Star mentions. We can't expect the Star to concede this point, but it is true nevertheless.

Secretary Taft told the Filipinos that if they were good they would be given a popular assembly in 1907. If they are horrid they will get nothing of the kind. As nobody really wants the Philippines except the Filipinos, why not give them the islands now?

Carl Carlson, burglar who was held at the point of a revolver, with a woman at the other end of it, is evidently not a believer in the tales the funny men tell about how women marksmen always hit everything except the things they aim at.
